

Harvesting time arrives on the Palouse at the same time students return to school after summer fun. Two combines work to harvest a local field. (Photo by Scott Grifis)

school located in the agricultural country of southeast Washington? This place most of us call "home" for at least four years.

WSU is one of the largest residential universities west of the Mississippi River with 65 percent of the students living on-campus instead of commuting from their

